

“As Catholic Christians, we believe that God is the author and architect of human life and no one else. Manufacturing human embryos, regardless of the intentions of the science, ignores a basic precept of our moral teaching— the end can not be used to justify the means. In the most recent case in the news, consider how many embryonic experiments failed or were destroyed prior to the one result that grabbed headlines.

“Society must be very careful when it puts its hand on the switch of human life. By design or default, this could be the beginning of a dangerous journey down the ‘slippery slope.’ Our government leaders, among others, can and should divert us from starting down that path.”
